JOHN MUIR (1838-1914)

Who was he?
Born in 1838 in the Scottish port of Dunbar, John Muir emigrated aged 11 with his family to the USA where he later became a founding father of the conservation movement and devoted his life to safeguarding the world’s landscapes. At home in the wild, John Muir made countless expeditions amongst mountains, forests and glaciers, and has inspired thousands with his writing and passion for wild places. He influenced the creation of Yosemite National Park (one of the first National Parks), was a founding member of the Sierra Club, and campaigned for the protection of areas of North American wilderness against commercial enterprises which threatened to destroy their natural heritage and beauty.

John Muir was something of an all-rounder - an explorer and adventurer, mountain climber, botanist, inventor, writer and dreamer. It was Muir’s view that it is not enough for people to be in sympathy with the plight of the natural world, but that they must become ‘active conservationists’ - as campaigners, practical project workers, scientists, artists and writers. John Muir might seem like a distant historical figure to some, but his message – that we all need to experience, enjoy and care for wild places – is as relevant today as it ever was.

The John Muir Award is the main engagement initiative of the John Muir Trust which takes its name and inspiration from Muir. To read more about our work, visit www.johnmuirtrust.org.

Muir’s modern legacy
Muir’s outlook has been questioned by the view that his writing discriminated against native American people. Some of the remarks that Muir made historically about indigenous peoples were and are not acceptable. Muir was a human being with flaws and faults, not a saint or a prophet.

Later in life, his views evolved. He outgrew a very strict upbringing turning disdain into empathy towards native peoples. He grew to admire indigenous communities for their light ecological footprint and careful stewardship of... the land. He wrote sympathetically about the impacts of colonialism and joined indigenous rights organisation. The Sequoya League.

Muir’s work as a scientist and advocate for nature has continued relevance in modern environmental campaigning. An openness to different points of view and a capacity to change one’s mind when presented with new information are character traits to be welcomed, while a focus on protecting nature for the health of the planet and all its inhabitants is more relevant now than ever.

Some people are inspired by Muir - who is your inspiration?
Across the world, activists and communities campaign for the better protection of our wild places, standing up for nature and driving positive change. Why not seek out opportunities to learn about and amplify the voices of those you feel a connection with – whether local champion, global advocate or unsung change-maker.

Muir quotes
Although John Muir claimed that he struggled with writing, some feel that – even after 100 years – Muir’s words on nature, beauty, enjoyment and health remain an inspiration. See ‘Useful websites’ on page 4 to find more.

“Thousands of tired, nerve-shaken, over-civilized people are beginning to find out that going to the mountains is going home; that wildness is a necessity; and that mountain parks and reservations are useful not only as fountains of timber and irrigating rivers, but as fountains of life.”

“I only went out for a walk, and finally concluded to stay out till sundown, for going out, I found, was really going in.”

“Native American Indians walk softly and they hurt the landscape hardly more than the birds and squirrels”

“When we try to pick out anything by itself, we find it hitched to everything else in the Universe.”

“One day’s exposure to mountains is better than cartloads of books.”

“Who publishes the sheet-music of the winds or the music of water written in river-lines?”

“Camp out among the grass of glacier meadows. Climb the mountains and get their good tidings. Nature’s peace will flow into you as sunshine flows into trees. The winds will blow their own freshness into you, and the storms their energy, while cares will drop off like autumn leaves.”

“In such places standing alone on the mountain-top it is easy to realize that whatever special nests we make - leaves and moss like the marmots and birds, or tents or piled stone - we all dwell in a house of one room - the world with the firmament for its roof - and are sailing the celestial spaces without leaving any track.”

“One touch of nature... makes all the world kin.”
